The reasons for employing interim managers are diverse. Often, a management position must be filled on short notice, without delay, and with competency – be it in order to temporarily fill a vacant position as part of the restructuring process or to fill the leadership position in case that there are no internal candidates for the position. Often, there are also issues for which a company do not have to provide capacity for a longer period (e.g. inception of an ERP system, business process optimization, or development of a controlling system).

Interim managers are often the best complement to the corporate management at certain stages of company development. This is especially true in cases where the existing management cannot cope with the upcoming tasks alone, or for tasks where special know-how is required for longer than just a few consulting days.

One of the advantages of employing interim managers is that they can make an unbiased assessment of situations and projects due to their outsider perspective. Besides, they are free of hierarchical thinking, and the company does not have to hold out cost-intensive staff resources for the managerial positions. Furthermore, interim managers can be useful for performing targeted tasks, and variable contract terms may be negotiated.

We offer our customers comprehensive interim management services in the fields of application in which we have long-standing experience, for example:

- Temporary filling of vacant positions
- Project management
- Crisis and change management

Thanks to our interdisciplinary approach, our interim management services draw on the whole breadth and depth of know-how in MSW business areas. To fully benefit from this, critical issues are not freely decided by the interim manager, but brainstormed in the team with a view to achieving the best possible solution for our clients. When we take over the steering wheel of implementation and success, this approach guarantees the highest conceivable quality for our clients.
